While Artificial Intelligence (AI) gets most of the mass media attention, we have been living for many years in an era of amazing technological advances. We have personal computers, smart phones, smart televisions, and driverless cars. "Snail" mail has been replaced by e-mail, which is often replaced by text messages. Information on any topic and even personal advice are just a click away. Technology makes our lives easier in many ways, but sometimes at a cost.

In this Round Table, the panelists and participants explore the benefits and risks associated with these changes in our world. We discuss how we use technology currently, how it helps us, and how it troubles us. Our goal is to examine ways to maintain our human connections at a time when technology may create disconnections in our lives.

We invite you to join us on May 30 to engage in this timely discussion. PLEASE LEAVE YOUR BOTS AT HOME.

CO-PRESENTERS:

John Cooper, Jon Pfautz and Bob Carty

Learning Objectives: At the close of this Roundtable, you will be able to:

- Describe ways in which technology may impact your well-being. including personally, physically, socially and intellectually.
- List benefits and detriments of technology on maintaining your healthy relationships.
- Verbalize how you might use technology to disconnect from others.
- Identify and commit to actions to maintain healthy human connections.
